CONCURRING OPINION

JUSTICE BAER DECIDED: NOVEMBER 20, 2019

I join the majority opinion reversing the Superior Court's affirmance of the trial court's grant of summary judgment to Janssen Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Johnson & Johnson

Company, and Janssen Research and Development, LLC (collectively, Janssen). I write separately to reiterate my concerns regarding Pennsylvania's continued adherence to the narrow approach to the discovery rule.

The majority correctly summarizes Pennsylvania jurisprudence regarding the discovery rule as utilizing a "narrow approach" involving "inquiry notice," which tolls the statute of limitations until a plaintiff has "actual or constructive knowledge" of the injury and awareness that the injury was caused by another. Maj. Op. at 11. This paradigm places a greater burden on plaintiffs as compared with the so-called "liberal" approach applied by most of our sister states. See Nicolaou v. Martin, 195 A.3d 880, 892-93 (Pa. 2018); Wilson v. El-Daief, 964 A.2d 354, 363-65 (Pa. 2009). The liberal approach looks to a plaintiff's actual or constructive knowledge of the existence of a cause of action, which tolls the statute of limitations until a reasonable plaintiff would have knowledge not only that an injury was caused by another but that the injury resulted from the negligence of another. Id.

As I have previously expressed, I question whether this Court should align our discovery rule jurisprudence with the liberal approach adopted by the majority of our sister states. See Wilson, 964 A.2d at 371-372 (Baer, J., concurring and dissenting). Nevertheless, I recognize that the issue is not before the Court in this case. Accordingly, as was true in our recent decision in Nicolaou, 195 A.3d at 892 n.14, "we await a future case" to consider whether to adopt the liberal approach.

Justice Donohue joins this concurring opinion.
