Yes, I liked being married but after this last situation I believe at this point in my life I want a partner that will commit to a long term relationship who lives, loves and shares their life with me and I with them. I am always trying to prove the best for whoever I am with but that doesn't necessarily mean money wise. Life takes fun turns and each of us go through different phases and challenges in our lives. I grew up on a dairy farm just up the road from my home. My parents still live there and my brother still milks cows. Growing up life was

My family has been in this area along time both on my mothers side and my fathers side. I was extremely fortunate that with the help of my parents, extended family and friends I was fortunate to become the Judge at 30 yrs old. I am the youngest judge ever started at that age in Bradford County. It was a lot of hardwork but if you

My first trip I want to go to is Saint John's Bay, where the water is a beautiful blue and the sand is a gorgeous light brown. Sorry to bother you but I have been studying NYS law for the past three hours when it comes to co ownership and if eviction is possible if only one co owner wants to stop the rental agreement. After throughly looking at the information online, it is not good. It states that one co good. It states that one co owner can enter into a rental agreement without the other person's consent as both parties have an equal right to the property. On the second issue of the eviction, it would appear to be the same way. Especially if the other co owners enters into a rental agreement either written or verbal. The other co owner can also rent the property out for no rent at all. There are also rules concerning harassment of the tenant by the lessor (ie either co owners). If they do receive monies then they have to split with the other co split with the other co owner. It would appear that if the co owners cannot come to an agreement on the property then the Court can intervene and force the parties into having it put the property up for sale (worst case scenario). I hope you are not offended by me looking this information up online. I just want you to know what you are looking at when you speak to an attorney. I am so sorry that I couldn't provide you with better answers to your situation with the house. Your best thing to do is get him to sell his share of the house to his share of the house to you and then do the eviction. If the renter has been there for over two years they are entitled to a 90 day notice to quit (notice to tell them to leave, posted by you). After that then you can proceed with the Court actions. Legally getting her out of your house. Like I said I did the best I could on researching this information tonight. You are my friend and I absolutely don't want you to be forced to sell the house because he will not cooperate with you. You know that I would have not spent that much time

I thought I would hear from you on how you made out the house today. You must be extremely busy with everything going on right now. I really like talking and being with you but sometimes I just wonder how I fit into your life right now. I want things to grow between us but if I only get a short text or a quick 15 minute call, how am I to do that? That is extremely hard to move from a friendship into a relationship. Well I will let you go for the evening. I hope you had a great and productive day. I guess we will talk or text some time will talk or text some time tomorrow if you are not busy working. Otherwise, I will just chill out and think about my options going forward. Communication is the key to any friendship/relationship and right now I feel that is lacking between us. You know that I will never call you on your cell phone as long as the two of you live together. I feel like the odd man out in this situation. Like I said earlier everything depends on you not me. I just do not want to be strung along for quite some time only to then learn that your intentions and mine are not the same and mine are not the same for each other. I would only be wasting your time and getting my hopes and dreams extremely hurt as we were not on the same page to begin with. It's nights like this, when I don't hear from you that I begin to wonder how important I am to you, as a friend that wants to develop a relationship with you. Well, I will let you go for the evening. I hope you have a great night of sleep and maybe we will get to talk or text some time soon, that all depends on your schedule. Take care

PS. If you think I am emotionally, mentally and psychologically hurting right now, you would be correct. I just don't understand why would you stay and live with someone that has physically abused you not only once. If I were in that situation I would have been out the door the next day and living somewhere else. I know you have your reasons but remember no matter how much money is on line, isn't your physical, mental, emotional and psychological health worth way more than anything money can buy or

My happiness, caring and loving someone means way more than anything that is materialistic in this world. Time is precious here on earth. Please don't waste any of it as we are never guaranteed tomorrow.
